SKILLS

- Excellent Written Communication: Strong written communication skills are crucial in non-voice customer support roles. The ability to articulate ideas clearly, use proper grammar and punctuation, and convey information effectively through written channels such as chat and email is essential.
 - Typing Proficiency: Since the primary mode of communication in non-voice customer support is through written messages, having good typing skills is important. Being able to type quickly and accurately enables efficient and prompt responses to customer inquiries.
 - Active Listening: Although non-voice customer support relies on written communication, active listening skills are still vital. Being able to understand and interpret customer messages accurately helps in providing relevant and satisfactory responses.
 - Problem-Solving Aptitude: Customers often reach out to customer support seeking assistance with various issues. Demonstrating strong problem-solving abilities allows you to analyze customer concerns, identify potential solutions, and provide appropriate resolutions effectively.
 - Multitasking Abilities: Non-voice customer support roles often involve managing multiple chat or email conversations simultaneously. Being able to multitask efficiently, prioritize tasks, and respond promptly to customer inquiries is crucial in maintaining high-quality support.
